Health Tomorrow: Interdisciplinarity and Internationality (HTII) is an open-access peer review journal based out of York University in Toronto. We are dedicated to publishing research that is relevant to issues of health from social justice perspectives.

HTII's Editorial Team works within interdisciplinary teams and cross-sectoral networks to draw together a range of social, biomedical, political, and environmental scholarship, as well as research from law, history, education, the arts, and the physical sciences. As a result, HTII bridges the divide between the sciences and the social sciences and encourages a range of theoretical, empirical, and interdisciplinary orientations to research.

This digital journal offers a unique forum for scholars to become involved in interdisciplinary health research and share their findings with others in a collegial environment. We welcome you to our website, encourage you to browse our publications, and hope that you will consider contributing to our next volume.

The Editorial Team supports equitable access to information and welcomes feedback on improving the accessibility of our webpage.

HTII would like to thank the generous sponsors of Volume 4:
